Dear sir,

I am writing this letter for Darrell, who is just recently arrested for drunk driving. I firmly believe that he will not be able to resume such activity.

My son and I have known each other since childhood. My wife and I have known our son since infancy. We educated him to respect others and be treated respectably, and therefore we are able to consider him a good man or woman.

We don't know when any of them returns home particularly drunk or hasn't identified any pattern for consuming a harmful thing. I completely know all his buddies and even when they tend to on Sundays, my son has always abstained.

People in the area, including our neighbours, are capable of saying you're a fine sir or madam. My father has been a part of the community since day one and has always helped others. He has always been supportive towards his peers, and he hopes everyone has an equal chance to live a happy life. He's a professional too, so he's had years of accomplishments under his belt.

Adoration has always come pouring in when it comes to excellent performance and he's even been applauded for executing that well. Last year, the boss of his own company, who was strongly loyal to him, had made a big deal out of it while complimenting him by means of that title that he's accustomed to using. He has been a very honourable, righteous person. You can also easily look up your local database; in that particular case, you will discover that the perpetrator in question has no criminal record.

I think Darell never performs voluntarily anything. I will ask you to research this concern. He is our only young child, and we do not want to visit him in serious pain. If you are ready to give us more information, then please notify us. We will be happy to tell you anything that you wish to know about him.

I really hope that truth wins.

Regards
Joe Sain
